

Annual Report 2014

Odyssey House

Where recovery lives

It is the mission of Odyssey House:

To provide comprehensive and innovative services to the broadest range of metro New York's population who:

- Abuse drugs
- Abuse alcohol
- Suffer from mental illness

To provide high quality, holistic treatment impacting all major life spheres: psychological, physical, social, family, educational and spiritual.

To support personal rehabilitation, renewal and family restoration.

In all of its activities, Odyssey House undertakes to act as a responsible employer and member of the community, and manage the assets of the organization in a professional manner.

Shared journeys

Living in recovery is about being positive. It's about committing to being your best self and working to get there. It's about knowing when to get help to prevent a relapse and understanding that challenges are part of the journey. It's about knowing where to go for help that is safe, supportive, and positive.

Odyssey House is committed to being that place. For us, recovery is only the beginning. We run programs that help people rebuild their lives and design buildings where healing and renewal are celebrated.

The stories you'll read in this annual report are from people who believe in sharing their recovery. They have overcome addiction, mental illness, homelessness, and trauma. For them, and the hundreds of people we help each year, we are proud to say Odyssey House is where recovery lives.

Chris, 18, and Warren, 23, are enrolled in the Odyssey House Leadership Center for transitional age youth. The Leadership Center offers a gender-specific approach to achieving lasting sobriety so young men can get back on track with schooling and other life goals. Our residents are encouraged to participate in extracurricular activities like the Odyssey House Art Project to keep them engaged in treatment and enrich their experience.

Investing in people

2014 was a banner year for Odyssey House. We met several long-term strategic goals to increase housing options, enhance treatment services, and expand community access. We celebrated the opening of two housing projects, completed Phase I of a rehabilitation project that will set a new standard for residential family treatment in New York City, and we pursued our commitment to excellence through evidence-based practices.

What is so exciting about these projects is their unwavering focus on improving the lives of vulnerable individuals and families. It is an impressive list that ranges from building new homes, developing treatment protocols that combine cutting-edge counseling and medical models, and promoting recovery through engagement in art and fitness.

Enhancing communities and promoting recovery

More than 120 formerly homeless men and women with mental health challenges moved into their own apartments in buildings we developed to our exacting design, construction, and program standards. These projects represent a significant investment by New York State in a social services model that reduces medical and psychiatric hospital costs, increases housing equity for disadvantaged individuals, and rebuilds neighborhoods.

As changes ushered in by the Affordable Care Act (ACA) take effect, Odyssey House is well positioned to take advantage of the movement to combine substance abuse and mental health services under the umbrella of behavioral healthcare. Our treatment and recovery services connect with, and promote access to, a range of medical and social services organizations that help our clients experience a seamless transition back to independent living. This annual report is an opportunity to share our accomplishments and recognize the people and organizations that support our mission.

First in achievement are the thousands of men and women who turn to us for help with substance abuse and mental health problems. Their bravery in the face of debilitating, multiple challenges is an inspiration. We accompany them on their journey to recovery and are proud of the contributions they make in their communities as committed parents and caregivers, productive workers and volunteers, and engaged students and mentors.

Odyssey House would not be able to offer such comprehensive and diverse services without the support of our public partners. The agencies who invest with us in providing quality services include: New York State Office of Alcoholism and Substance Abuse Services; Office of Mental Health; Division of Parole and Division of Criminal Justice Services of the Department of Correctional Services; Department of Housing, Preservation, and Development; our elected representatives; community and business leaders; neighborhood associations; and public health and safety representatives. At the national level we thank the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration for essential grant funding and the White House Office of National Drug Control Policy for promoting treatment and prevention.

Our deepest appreciation goes to members of the Boards of Trustees; philanthropic, corporate, and foundation partners; and clinical and administrative staff for their unwavering commitment to the cause of recovery and wholehearted embrace of our core values of service to others. We thank you all.

Samantha M.

Odyssey House Family Center of Excellence
Age: 27

When Samantha entered Odyssey House mere days after giving birth to her second child, she was looking for a second chance – to be a better mother, to secure a brighter future, to achieve a sustainable recovery.

A few years earlier, Samantha had spent 13 months in another treatment program for opiate addiction. She was clean for four years before relapsing. “I didn’t have the right attitude the first time around. I didn’t think I needed to be there.” But now, as a mother of two young children, ages eight months and three years, recovery took on a whole new significance.

“It’s not just about me anymore. I’m committed to recovery in a way I wasn’t before – I’m far more open-minded and receptive to treatment. If I don’t stay clean, I’ll lose everything and I’m not going to let that happen. I have two lives depending on me.”

Though the process has been overwhelming at times, being in treatment with her children has kept Samantha motivated. “The nursery has been incredibly helpful, and the parenting groups are amazing. I’ve learned healthy coping skills, appropriate discipline techniques, and patience.”

As Samantha nears the end of her treatment at Odyssey House, she has been preparing for the future – training to become a home health aide and seeking assistance with housing. “When I leave here, it’ll be the first time having a place of my own. I can’t wait to have a fresh start, and to demonstrate to my kids why it’s important to put your best foot forward and do the right thing.”

Tenzin C.

Odyssey House Lafayette Avenue, residential treatment for young women
Age: 22

After moving to the US from India in 2006, Tenzin has been confronted with all sorts of barriers – language, cultural, emotional. But since entering treatment at Lafayette Avenue, she has made impressive progress overcoming these barriers and building a foundation for success.

Two years ago, while struggling with post-partum depression, Tenzin started self-medicating with marijuana. Her depression and substance use soon escalated, and she was referred to Odyssey House by the NYC Administration for Children's Services.

While at Odyssey House, Tenzin learned to face her fears, control her emotions, and be more expressive. No longer hindered by a language barrier or insecurity about her accent, she focused on her future. Tenzin completed a Medical Assistant program and found a part-time job at a local hospital. She also enrolled in a CUNY college prep program with a plan to go to nursing school.

In addition to her educational achievements, Tenzin has secured housing for herself and her son and is looking forward to reuniting with him soon. "It has been hard being away from my son, but I have to do what's best for both of us. I know everything I learned in treatment will make me a better mother and give both of us a better life."

Combating Heroin at Odyssey House

100% outpatient services staff trained in opioid overdose prevention techniques, including emergency use of life-saving naloxone injections.

In New York City, deaths from heroin overdoses were higher last year than they have been since 2003. Deaths from overdoses of opioid painkillers such as hydrocodone have also risen.

HOUSING FIRST PLUS

New generation of supportive housing services focus on healthy living with green construction and design, in-house services, and community involvement.

Affordable, stable housing has been linked with improved outcomes in the areas of health, education, and fiscal security. Stable housing represents not only a foundation for well-being, but a platform for connecting people to such vital services as quality health care, schools, community centers, grocery stores, and libraries, helping all families to thrive.

With the demand for safe housing especially acute among clients recovering from substance use and mental health disorders, many of whom are formerly homeless, Odyssey House has been developing housing services that complement and extend the efficacy of its residential treatment programs. Nearly one-third of clients entering our intensive substance abuse treatment programs are either homeless or marginally housed. As part of their recovery process, we work with them to strengthen relapse prevention techniques, enhance skill-building and job placement, and find and maintain secure homes.

From 2011 to 2014, the availability of Odyssey House supportive housing nearly doubled from 250 to 420 units. This growing portfolio reflects New York State's commitment to helping individuals and families with extensive histories of homelessness — many with severe mental illness — reclaim their lives in secure, integrated, and attractive housing through the New York/New York III Supportive Housing Agreement. Numerous studies demonstrate that supportive housing is not only the most effective solution to homelessness for vulnerable individuals and families, but also one that is highly cost-effective, reducing public spending on shelters, hospitals, psychiatric centers, and other expensive emergency interventions.

With funding from New York State Office of Mental Health (OMH), two new supportive housing buildings, Odyssey House Soundview Avenue and Odyssey House Tinton

Sustainable landscape design, including vegetable garden plots, builds community and promotes healthy eating.

Odyssey House
Tinton Avenue
65 apartments

Avenue, opened in the Bronx in 2014, serving 121 chronically homeless adults with a diagnosis of serious mental illness. Tenants in both buildings have access to a full range of supportive services, including substance abuse and mental health treatment, medical and dental care, educational and vocational services, and community-based recovery networks.

Dedicated to being a valued community partner while improving quality of life for the vulnerable people we serve, both buildings have been designed with special care to match their neighborhoods' architectural styles, while encouraging tenant interaction through communal dining rooms, lounges, on-site gym facilities, and landscaped courtyards. Our model demonstrates not only that permanent, supportive housing is essential to breaking the cycle of homelessness, but that, with the proper support, formerly homeless New Yorkers can live in their own homes despite serious mental health challenges.

PROMOTING

Health & Fitness

Recovery is more than just sobriety. It includes encouraging clients to take responsibility for their health and engage in regular physical activity.

Men, women, and children living in Odyssey House residential programs have access to a broad range of medical and dental services. At our well-equipped clinics, on-site primary care physicians, pediatricians and nurses provide vaccinations, treat asthma, and address other health issues. Our full-service dental clinic provides dental procedures and routine checkups to repair the effects of a lifetime of neglect.

Exercise makes us feel better, both mentally and physically, and that is why physical fitness is such a big part of the Odyssey House experience. Facilities are equipped with exercise equipment and weights, and residents are encouraged to enjoy yoga, Pilates, basketball and other team sports. Especially popular is Run for Your Life, a program that brings residents of all ages together several times a week in New York's Central Park to walk or run. Many clients, staff, and supporters go on to complete the NYC Marathon.

These activities provide residents with a chance to develop relationships with one another, improve their self-esteem, and gain control over their bodies. Most important of all, they introduce residents to yet another component of a richer, fuller, more satisfying substance-free life.

Adrienne F.

Odyssey House Tinton Avenue
Age: 54

After a series of hardships left Adrienne without a job or a home, she and her son moved into a family shelter for a year. Recognizing it was not the best place to raise a child, Adrienne moved her son in with his father. She transferred into a women's shelter, but the trauma of being homeless and living without her son became overwhelming, and she was diagnosed with a mood disorder. Moving into Odyssey House Tinton Avenue was a huge relief. "When you are in a shelter, you are not living – you are merely existing. Now I have a chance of reaching my goals and reuniting with my son."

One element that has been critical in her recovery is fitness. In college, Adrienne was an accomplished sprinter, shot putter, and discus thrower. Recently she resumed her athletic lifestyle, becoming a body builder and a personal trainer. "I really enjoy helping others achieve their fitness goals. And exercising regularly keeps my body and mind in good health."

Joseph S.

Odyssey House ElderCare Program

Age: 63

After more than four decades of petty crime and strained relationships due to chronic alcohol and drug use, Joseph finally had his life together. He had been sober for seven years and had a good job doing building maintenance at the church where he was a member. But all it took was one drink to lose it all.

“I went out for dinner with a friend to celebrate her new promotion, and I thought to myself, ‘What’s the harm in having just one drink?’ That turned into one drink every night, until I was getting drunk and smoking crack every day.”

Joseph lost his job and returned to petty crime to make ends meet. He was caught shoplifting and a community court referred him to treatment, where Joseph started to regain control of his life. “Odyssey House gave me time to reflect – on what I’ve done in the past, and who I want to be in the future – and the ability to reconnect with my peers.”

During his earlier period of sobriety, Joseph counseled others struggling with substance use disorders and helped get them into treatment. “Supporting others in their recovery kept me clean and accountable. I’m looking forward to resuming that role when I leave here. I am determined not to let down my community or myself again. Next time I wonder, ‘what would the harm be?’ I’ll know the answer. And I’ll never make the same mistake again.”

RECOVERY

in the Community

Many of the events and activities we sponsor commemorate the ways in which people overcome drug abuse and develop healthy new lives, take control of chronic mental health challenges, and contribute to their communities. In keeping with our mission to provide services to the broadest range of the population, last year's events included the opening of two new supportive housing buildings in the Bronx, celebrating fitness and wellness at our 9th Annual Run for Your Life 5K, and publishing a 10 year retrospective collection of more than 90 artworks by the Odyssey House Art Project. We are also pleased to honor the staff members who received statewide recognition for their incredible work and those who represent Odyssey House at community events. When committed individuals come together to support our mission, they make a powerful difference in the lives of thousands of New Yorkers.

A book launch party at a downtown gallery celebrated the publication of Release: An Odyssey of Art and Recovery, a collection of more than 90 artworks created by members of the Odyssey House Art Project. The book was curated by Justin Peters, Vice Chairman of the Odyssey House Board of Trustees, with the help of President and CEO Dr. Peter Provet and others. Please visit odysseyhouseart.org to view an excerpt from the book and make a donation to receive a copy.

As a token of thanks, Odyssey House Board Chairman Richard O'Connor presented Justin Peters with a copy of Release signed by everyone who worked on the project.

Graphic designer Chris Cantley and Justin Peters set up for the book launch party.

More than 1,000 people came out to Icahn Stadium on a beautiful September morning to show their support for men and women in recovery.

Staff members represented Odyssey House at the 2014 AIDS Walk New York in Central Park.
