BELIEVING IN CHANGE

IT IS THE MISSION OF ODYSSEY HOUSE:

* To provide comprehensive and innovative services to the metro New York population who:

- * Abuse drugs
- * Abuse alcohol
- * Suffer from mental illness.

* To provide high-quality, holistic treatment impacting all major life spheres: psychological, physical, social, family, educational, and spiritual.

* To support personal rehabilitation, renewal, and family restoration.

In all of its activities Odyssey House undertakes to act as a responsible employer and member of the community, and to manage the assets of the organization in a professional manner.

A STEP AHEAD OF THE TIMES

For 40 years, Odyssey House has provided innovative services and a chance for a new, drug-free life to thousands of teenagers, men and women of all ages, and entire families. In the 1960s we enhanced the therapeutic community model to treat heroin addiction. In the 1970s we began reaching out to drug-abusing pregnant women and mothers of young children. In the 1980s we expanded our programs to meet the challenge of a crack cocaine epidemic. In the 1990s we designed special programs for the mentally ill and for a growing number of elderly substance abusers. In the new millennium we have provided shelter and treatment to homeless addicts, many with special needs including HIV/AIDS. We will remain at the forefront of substance abuse treatment in the years ahead.

CHANGING LIVES, CHANGING TIMES

As Odyssey House celebrates 40 years of public service to New Yorkers with substance abuse and mental health problems, we reflect on the challenges earlier generations faced in rebuilding their lives, how much these men and women taught us about determination and hope, and what more we can do to lessen the deadly toll addiction continues to take on the lives of thousands of New Yorkers.

Our founding in 1967 took place during a period of social, political, and global upheaval for Americans from all walks of life. Civil rights, women's rights, and gay rights created opportunities for millions of people to engage more fully in political, business, and community life. But along with these positive changes came negative ones, not the least of which was the growing number of substance abusers who threatened to overwhelm limited treatment resources.

Odyssey House responded to this increase with a pioneering self-help model, the therapeutic community (TC). This approach counters the despair of addiction with peer support and the guidance of positive role models.

Over these past 40 years addiction treatment has changed considerably. We have expanded our treatment to include services for women with children, teens, people with mental and physical illness, and senior citizens. We have also extended our holistic approach by establishing onsite primary medical clinics and a new full-service dental clinic.

To be sure, significant progress has been made in preventing, responding to, and alleviating the individual and societal costs of addiction, but so much more needs to be done.

The creation of drug courts helped steer thousands of addicts from prison into treatment. Advocacy efforts by substance abuse treatment and mental health organizations have raised awareness of disparities in funding, and national research institutes have become more receptive to community-based organizations.

At the same time significant challenges remain: discriminatory funding practices that pay less for addiction and mental health treatment than other chronic conditions; a legal system that criminalizes addiction; and insufficient academic research that analyzes the effectiveness of community-based applications.

These issues carry enormous consequences for how society responds to addiction and the fate of individuals caught in its grip. We are fortunate to have supportive partners who work alongside us to provide quality services that save lives and money.

In New York State we thank our partners at the Office of Alcoholism and Substance Abuse Services, Office of Mental Health, and Department of Health. In New York City we thank the Department of Housing Preservation & Development, Board of Education, HIV/AIDS Services Administration, and Department of Health and Mental Hygiene. And in Washington, DC, we thank the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration.

We also thank our corporate sponsors, foundation partners, and "Friends of Odyssey House" for their support, and members of the boards of Odyssey House and Odyssey Foundation for their commitment to helping individuals and families achieve a healthy recovery.

We hope you will join us as we build on these accomplishments over the next years.

In 1967, heroin use reaches epidemic proportions in New York and other U.S. cities. Odyssey House begins operating as a small residential unit at Metropolitan Hospital in East Harlem. This innovative program breaks new ground by treating substance abusers in the group setting of a therapeutic community.

CHANGING LIVES

The 1960s was a time of social upheaval. The antiwar movement, civil rights, feminism, and gay rights all came to the fore in this turbulent decade. So did experimentation with drugs. Smoking marijuana was part of the 1960s counterculture and a common feature of life on college campuses. Soldiers often used drugs for the first time during their tours of duty in Vietnam, and some became addicted to "hard" drugs, especially heroin. Many brought their addictions home with them, and heroin became readily available in American cities.

Odyssey House opened its doors in 1967, when heroin was taking a firm and devastating grip on the lives of many New Yorkers. At a time when methadone therapy was just about the only treatment available for heroin addiction, Odyssey House added an innovative component—the therapeutic community. In a 24/7 residential setting, treatment staff and men and women in recovery formed a highly structured, peer-driven community that helped substance abusers re-establish the emotional strength and acquire the skills to lead drug-free lives.

Since these beginnings in (1967), Odyssey House has been a leader in shaping the therapeutic community as a highly effective method for treating substance abuse. In a range of innovative programs in ever-expanding facilities, Odyssey House has enhanced community living to include medical services, cultural and recreational activities, educational and vocational guidance, housing assistance, day care, and other programs to support the well-being of thousands of clients.

By 1970, drug addiction among teenagers, and the attendant death rate from overdose, begins to soar. In New York City alone, an estimated 100,000 teens are addicted to heroin. Odyssey House becomes the first program in the country to treat this population.

TREATING TEENS

Teenagers are especially vulnerable to drug abuse, and even casual experimentation can lead to addiction to powerful substances. In New York and other cities, youngsters are often exposed to illicit substances at an early age. Many adolescent users have been raised in a drug culture and come from homes shattered by drug abuse and the neglect and violence that often accompany addiction. Addicts as young as 12 years old in Odyssey House programs have reported using and selling drugs like crack cocaine and heroin. Marijuana, though, is the drug of choice for this age group, and studies show that teenagers are three times more likely than adults to become dependent on marijuana.

Odyssey House recognized the growing drug epidemic among teenagers as early as 1969 and in that year opened a 35-bed facility for this age group. Today, separate Teen Leadership Center facilities for boys and girls provide substance abuse treatment for close to 80 teenagers in residential settings. Not only do participants address their patterns of substance abuse; they also confront the behavioral problems from which they have sought refuge in drugs and learn to live harmoniously as part of a community. Treating boys and girls separately has proved to be especially effective in addressing many of the behavioral and self-esteem issues with which many teens cope.

While residing at the Leadership Centers, teens follow a New York City high school curriculum and are taught on-site by Board of Education licensed teachers. For many participants, the center provides their first opportunity to develop the discipline and focus required to succeed academically. Encouraging studies from the National Institute on Drug Abuse show that drug-abusing teens who participate in programs like the Odyssey House Teen Leadership Center not only successfully break their dependence on drugs and alcohol, but also show a marked improvement in academic performance. Odyssey House counselors further enhance the future prospects of these youngsters by helping them prepare for ongoing education and on-the-job training.

Recognizing the devastating toll that substance abuse takes on young families, In 1973 Odyssey House launches Mothers and Babies Off Narcotics (MABON), the country's first residential treatment program for pregnant women and parents with their young children.

PUTTING FAMILIES FIRST

Depression and other mental disorders, low-self esteem, and a lack of education and skills often lead adults to drugs and undermine their efforts to care for themselves and their children. As a result, youngsters in such families are often the innocent victims of drug abuse. With one or both parents lost to drugs, they are often virtually orphans, and a string of foster care homes once was the only option for providing them with care.

In 1973, Odyssey House began providing an innovative alternative to this pattern of drugs and despair, a program called MABON that allowed drug-addicted parents and their children to stay together while helping break the cycle of drug abuse and strengthening the family unit.

Odyssey House has been committed to building stronger families ever since. Today, more than 200 parents and their children live in Odyssey House Family Centers of Excellence. Mothers and fathers do not need to choose between caring for their children and seeking the treatment they need. Pregnant women and parents of children 5 years of age and younger reside together in parent/child units from 12 to 24 months.

The treatment facilities provide the first stable home environments many of the young residents have ever known. They take part in onsite, licensed daycare and preschool programs, have access to pediatric clinics and other medical care, and enjoy playgrounds and leisure activities. Their parents participate in Odyssey House substance abuse treatment programs that help them address the problems that have led them to drugs and prevented them from providing healthy homes for their children. Medical care and health education, parenting skills training, educational and vocational counseling, and job training are also part of the treatment regimen, ensuring that these parents will be able to care for themselves and their children in nurturing, drug-free environments.

EASING BACK IN

To jump-start success in the real world, Odyssey House helps families make the transition from the therapeutic community to independent living. Two innovative programs—Shelter Plus Care and the Family Center of Excellence Re-Entry Program—help as many as 45 families at a time make this big move to independence while still receiving many of the benefits of a therapeutic community. Families who have lived together at Odyssey House as well as parents who are being reunited with their children after leaving its programs have the opportunity to live in furnished apartments in one of several fully supervised transitional facilities around the city. Substance abuse education continues in these facilities, and counselors are on hand to help residents master the basics of maintaining a healthy home, develop peer support networks, and in other ways set a firm foundation for independent living.

MEDICAL CARE FOR KIDS AND ADULTS

Families living in Odyssey House residential programs have access to a broad range of medical services. At well-equipped clinics, youngsters receive treatment for conditions that otherwise may well have been overlooked. Onsite primary care physicians, pediatricians, and nurses provide vaccinations, treat asthma, and address other childhood health issues. Adults in all Odyssey House programs have access to the same excellent medical attention. After a complete examination upon entering a program, residents can receive treatment for diabetes, hepatitis B and C, HIV, sexually transmitted diseases, tuberculosis, and depression and other mental health disorders—all ailments that commonly accompany substance abuse addiction but are often undiagnosed and untreated. Good health practices are essential to an addict's full recovery, so these clinics also conduct a variety of wellness programs that focus on such topics as smoking cessation, diabetes and asthma management, and safe sexual practices.

Odyssey House residents also have access to an onsite dentistry clinic where they can get treatment for often-overlooked dental problems and develop good oral hygiene habits.

By the mid-1980s, New York City is in the grips of an epidemic of crack cocaine use. Odyssey House expands its programs to treat a growing number of addicts.

OFFERING HOPE AMID A CRISIS

As the use of crack cocaine skyrocketed in New York and other cities in the 1980s and 90s, demand for Odyssey House treatment services grew. With its experience and expertise in treating substance abusers, Odyssey House was well equipped to meet the challenges of this new epidemic. Service expansions included a new, 333-bed facility in East Harlem that extended Odyssey House treatment to growing numbers of adult substance abusers and addicted parents with children.

Women are especially vulnerable to crack, and Odyssey House was in a unique position to address their special needs through its MABON program. The demand for this innovative approach to family treatment, in place since 1973, expanded greatly in the 1980s as the number of women using crack and other illicit substances climbed into the hundreds of thousands and as many as 10,000 babies were born to substance-addicted mothers in New York City each year. Many of these infants suffered with health problems stemming from malnutrition, neglect, and a lack of prenatal care, and MABON was one of only a few programs in New York City equipped to provide the treatment and special attention they required.

1967-2007

Addressing the link between substance abuse and schizophrenia, bipolar disorder, and other chronic mental conditions, Odyssey House opens Odyssey House Harbor.

Meeting the increased needs of older Americans for treatment services, Odyssey House opens the country's first publicly-funded ElderCare program.

MANAGING MENTAL ILLNESS

Men and women suffering from mental illness are especially prone to substance abuse. The effects of addiction combined with the challenges of chronic mental conditions can be devastating, isolating these men and women from family, making it almost impossible for them to lead productive lives in the community, and often rendering them homeless. At Odyssey House Harbor in East Harlem, specialists enhance treatment in a therapeutic residential community with intensive mental health services and coaching in life skills ranging from personal hygiene to financial management. Up to 60 residents, most referred from city and state psychiatric facilities, partake in supervised community living plus group therapy, work assignments, and vocational counseling and job training—all part of preparing themselves to take control of their lives and re-enter the community.

When the time comes, Odyssey House helps these men and women make the difficult transition into permanent housing. Residents in treatment attend a Wellness Self Management Techniques Workshop that teaches such real-life skills as budgeting, making rent payments on time, and grocery shopping. Once participants have successfully completed the workshop, a placement specialist helps them find affordable housing, accompanies them on interviews with landlords, and helps negotiate rental contracts. In this way, Odyssey House helps break the cycle of relapse and homelessness.

SERVING ALL AGES

As baby boomers, many of whom experimented with drugs in the 1960s and 1970s, head towards late middle age and their senior years, the number of older Americans with substance addictions is growing dramatically. The federal Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration estimated 1.7 million Americans over the age of 50 are addicted and predict this population will grow to 4.4 million by 2020.

As the number of older people with addiction problems increase, so does the demand for treatment. Odyssey House's ElderCare program focuses on the special needs of this populations whose numbers are increasing by as much as 20 percent a year.

At any one time, as many as 70 men and women take part in Odyssey House's ElderCare residential treatment program, and others attend a community-based extension as outpatients. Residential and outpatient programs alike provide comprehensive services to help break their dependence on illicit and prescription drugs and alcohol. Participants engage in group sessions, seminars, and other therapeutic activities, and are encouraged to involve family members in the treatment process. These men and women benefit from sharing their experiences with peers who have common backgrounds and experiences, as well as a desire to lead a drug-free life.

Addressing the link between chronic drug abuse and homelessness, Odyssey House offers housing and support services to homeless men and women with offers special needs.

BELIEVING IN CHANGE

HOUSING AND TREATING THE HOMELESS

Many men and women have been reduced to a life on the streets because untreated addictions have caused them to lose homes, families, and jobs. Homeless drug abusers typically present complex challenges: their substance abuse can be compounded by medical conditions, both physical and mental.

Odyssey House offers a continuum of care that assists people in recovery as they transition back into the community. Ongoing supportive services, such as housing, employment and legal assistance, begin before a resident leaves residential treatment and are continued in outpatient services.

Maintaining a healthy home is the number one priority for residents starting out on their own after completion of an intensive treatment experience. But the hurdles in finding affordable new homes in a safe neighborhood can be overwhelming for many residents.

To help them overcome these barriers, Odyssey House offers a range of housing services including: the Odyssey House Haven, a 63-unit apartment building in East Harlem that provides permanent, independent housing to formerly homeless men and women with mental and physical disabilities, supervised housing for families re-entering society, and housing assistance for formerly homeless persons enrolled in our programs.

MOVING FORWARD TO TOTAL WELLNESS

Odyssey House continues to provide new approaches to help men and women break away from drug abuse and lead healthy, drug-free lives. Many of these programs address total wellness, recognizing that creative expression and psychological and physical well-being are key factors in a full recovery from substance abuse.

Addressing the fact that substance abuse is often accompanied by smoking, Odyssey House has launched a Case Management Smoking Cessation Program that offers individual and group counseling, nicotine-replacement therapy, and education concerning the physical, psychological, and social aspects of tobacco.

Participants in all Odyssey House Programs have access to fitness equipment and are encouraged to make walking, running, yoga, weight training, and other fitness activities part of their recovery regimen. Residents are also encouraged to take advantage of Odyssey House creative arts programs, in which participants express themselves through painting, sculpture, and other artistic endeavors; many of the works are exhibited in the annual Odyssey House Art Project. Changing exhibits of artworks—by both professional artists and participants in Odyssey House programs—fill the Odyssey House Haven Art Gallery. The gallery is a celebration of the treatment and recovery process: creating art is highly therapeutic for Odyssey House residents, and having their work exhibited in a public setting is a great source of pride.

SUPPORTING ODYSSEY HOUSE

Through their generous support of initiatives that bring people closer to Odyssey House, board members and other supporters are the driving force behind the agency's development of new programs and services. They are also the heart and soul of an organization that is committed to helping people change their lives. They voluntarily give their time and resources to ensure every man, woman, and child who turns to us for help is treated with respect and compassion.

In the last year, Odyssey House received wide-ranging support from private foundations, business and community leaders, and individuals. Their efforts enabled us to host our first 5K fundraiser benefiting treatment and recovery services. More than 1,000 people participated in the Odyssey House "Run for Your Life" event held on September 23rd at the Icahn International Stadium, on Ward's Island in East Harlem. The run raised funds for our health and wellness services, including training and participation fees for the Odyssey House NYC Marathon Team.

The link between physical fitness and a sustained recovery from substance abuse has, in the last few years, gained traction in the treatment field. Treatment agencies across the country have started to include regular physical exercise in the treatment programs and encourage people in recovery to join gyms and clubs that endorse sober living. At Odyssey House, residents can participate in regular exercise programs ranging from running groups, yoga and Pilates, to team sports.
