What is Medication-Assisted Treatment?

Medication-Assisted Treatment (MAT) is pharmacotherapy used to support treatment and recovery efforts for people seeking to overcome addictive disorders. It combines prescribed medications with counseling and behavioral therapies, monitoring, community-based services, and recovery supports. MAT is designed to assist, not replace other treatment and recovery efforts, and supplements psychological, behavioral, and social interventions.

This treatment approach has been shown to:

- Reduce risk of overdose
- Increase retention in treatment
- Decrease opiate use and other illicit activity among people with substance use disorders
- Increase ability to gain and maintain employment
- Improve birth outcomes among pregnant women who have substance use disorders

Our Mission

Odyssey House will work individually with clients using MAT and recovery coaching to empower individuals in their recovery process and connect them to long-term community supports.

We will assist participants with identifying and accessing the appropriate medication to support and maintain their individualized recovery.

MAT Services:

- Access to buprenorphine (Suboxone, Sublocade) and naltrexone (Vivitrol)
- Telehealth services
- Weekly medical services
- Weekly evidence-based counseling services
- Weekly peer-based recovery support services
- Connections to outpatient treatment
- Connection to Recovery Center
- Opioid overdose reversal training
- Community advocacy

“ Recovery from opioid use disorders is possible. Research shows that medication-assisted treatment is most effective when combined with behavioral therapy. At Odyssey House, we’ll help you get what you need to get your life back on track. ”
